The term "animism" was coined by the anthropologist E.B. Tylor (1832–1917). [1] It considers religion as a belief in spiritual beings. [2] According to Tylor, religious belief came from the primordial culture of attributing life and a soul, or spirit to inanimate objects like rivers, mountains and rocks to name just these few. [3]

Sir Edward Burnett Tylor was an English anthropologist, the founder of cultural anthropology. Tylor's ideas typify 19th-century cultural evolutionism. In his works Primitive Culture and Anthropology, he defined the context of the scientific study of anthropology, based on the evolutionary theories of Charles Lyell. He believed that there was a functional basis for the development of society and religion, which he determined was universal. Tylor maintained that

By On Frazer ...

The name animism, formerly applied to a definite philosophic system, seems to have acquired its present meaning through E. B. Tylor. 2 2 What led to the formulation of these names is the insight into the very remarkable conceptions of nature and the world of those primitive races known to us from history and from our own times.

Chapter III. Animism, Magic and the Omnipotence of Thought ...

The idea of animism was developed by anthropologist Sir Edward Tylor through his 1871 book Primitive Culture, in which he defined it as "the general doctrine of souls and other spiritual beings in general."

E.B. Tylor and James Frazer are two of the earliest researchers to develop theories of the nature of religion. They defined religion as essentially being the belief in spiritual beings, making it systematized animism.

Explaining the Existence of Religion and Beliefs

Tylor's rationale for classifying "magic" as a "survival" is an overall scheme of cultural evolution: "magic", he claims, belongs "in its main principle to the lowest known stages of civilization" and while "progressive races have been learning to submit their opinions to closer and closer experimental tests, occult science has been
